KNOWLEDGE TO ACTION

KNOWLEDGE:

ASSESSING EDUCATIONAL NEEDS OF CHILDREN

The purpose of assessing the educational needs of children is to collect information necessary to make important decisions about services or supports that may be needed to help each child improve their overall success and well-being. Assessment must always serve in ways that enhance opportunities for optimal growth, development, and learning. The process of determining individual educational needs informs education practices and provides a template for setting individual goals.

Formal assessments usually entail the use of standardized tests -- tests that must be administered according to prescribed time limits, instructional and scoring procedures, and administration guidelines. Some of the options available for formal assessments include school based assessments, Early Steps, Child Find, etc. Formal tests usually fall into the following categories:

- Achievement tests
- Readiness tests
- Developmental screening tests
- Intelligence tests
- Diagnostic tests

Informal assessments do not use standardized tests but are other ways to obtain valuable and necessary information to assess needs and make decisions about educational needs and services for a child. Informal assessments include observations, anecdotal reports, interviews, reviews of actual work, reviews of reports, etc. Informal assessments should continually focus on child performance, processes, and products over periods of time and in a variety of contexts.

ACTION:

1. Assess for educational needs, regardless of age. The type of assessment may vary but even infants can be assessed through observation and interview for educational needs. An example would be observing that a 1yr old is not holding his own bottle/cup. An action to teach a child this would possibly be playing the monkey see/monkey do game with the child for a couple of weeks and then reassessing to see if the child has learned or is improving on holding the item themselves. If not, then there needs to be discussion about whether a more formal assessment may need to be arranged to see if it might be a developmental or physical issue.
2. Observe: Observe the child in the home every visit and at least quarterly in the school/daycare. Look for any indications of the child struggling or not being on pace with where the child would be expected to be performing.
3. Interview the Caregiver: At every visit have a conversation with the caregiver about the child's progress educationally. Ask about concerns, barriers, needs the child has regarding education and development.
4. Interview the Child: At every visit have a conversation with the child about his/her progress educationally. Ask about things they have learned. Ask what they like best and what they like least. Ask how they are doing in those areas. Assess if there are services or activities which might help the child improve their performance. Ask about concerns, barriers, needs the child has regarding his/her education and skills development.
5. Interview the Teacher: At least quarterly have a conversation with the child's teacher(s) about the child's progress educationally. Ask about concerns, barriers, needs the child has regarding education and development. Ask what services have been put in place or what other services might be available through the school to assist the child in these areas.
6. Review: At least monthly review the child's education screens in Mindshare, progress reports from school, homework assignments the child has, etc.
7. Act/Consult: Actively seek services/supports and get them in place without delay. If there are barriers discuss everything you learn through each of the activities above with your supervisor. Brainstorm ways to help the child more. Determine if more formal assessments are needed. Consult with the DCF Liaison at the school or the HFC School Liaison.
8. Document: Thoroughly document in FSN what you learn through these steps and what actions you take.

Clinging to one's abuser is not exclusive to childhood. Hostages have put up bail for their captors, expressed a wish to marry them, or had sexual relations with the; victims of domestic violence often cover up for their abusers. Judges often tell me how humiliated they feel when they try to protect victims of domestic violence by issuing restraining orders, only to find out that many of them secretly allow their partners to return.
